MENTAL DEFICIENCY

Adult Section of the Report of the Mental Deficiency Committee.

The Children Section of this Committee's Report, together with Dr. E. O. Lewis' Report on his special investigation into the incidence of mental defect, were published in April last. These reports have attracted widespread notice in the Press and amongst educational administrators, teachers, and medical men. The volume has been in great demand and a second edition has already been issued.

The Adult Section of the Report is now published. In it the Committee discuss the difficult problems presented by mental deficiency among adolescents and adults. They describe the existing provision for such defectives and suggest modifications calculated to remove some of the difficulties which face Local Mental Deficiency Authorities.

They draw attention to the heavy burden which mental deficiency imposes upon the community, and they consider various methods—segregation, socialisation, sterilization—of alleviating this burden and of reducing the incidence of mental defect.

Among the recommendations are :

Unity and continuity of control must be secured.

Institution care. Urgent need for more institutions—the modern colony—various kinds of institutions needed for different types of case—extended use of Licence.

Community care.

Supervision—only to be employed for defectives who can be trained and efficiently controlled and guarded—suggested changes in present system.

Guardianship—far-reaching modification of existing methods.

This Report approaches the subject both from the scientific and from the practical points of view ; it contains suggestions and recommendations which should be studied by all concerned with the care of defectives and all who are interested in social questions : and it concludes with a survey of mental deficiency as a social and genetic problem.

The Report of the Joint Committee of the Board of Education and Board of Control on Mental Deficiency may now be obtained in the following volumes :

SEX IN CIVILIZATION

Over thirty distinguished scientists and sociologists have contributed to this important work, which touches on every aspect of sex—in primitive society, in religion, in education, in behaviour of every kind, with detailed studies of the clinical and psychological aspects of sex. The contributors include: WILLIAM McDOUGALL, WILLIAM J. FIELDING, FRITZ WITTELS, MARGARET SANGER, ROBERT BRIFFAULT, G. V. HAMILTON and KENNETH MACGOWAN.

“It contains an immense amount of authentic material in the shape both of careful observation and of pertinent and stimulating commentary.”—New Statesman. 20s.

MARRIAGE & MORALS

By BERTRAND RUSSELL

This book deals with marriage, past, present, and future, showing the interconnection of biological, economic, and religious factors in sexual ethics. The existing ethic is traced to two sources: the desire to make sure of paternity, and the belief that sex, except after certain precautions, is sinful. There is a discussion of the changes being brought about by contraceptives and by the increasing share of the State in the care of children. It is suggested that marriage as a legal institution is only required in the interests of children and performs no useful function where childless relations are concerned. Such relations therefore should in the opinion of the author be exempted from the control of law and public opinion. 7s. 6d.
